SPARKLES 2025

An Unforgettable Experience – My Journey as an Anchor at SPARKLES

When the lights finally came on, I found the answer to my question what truly makes an experience unforgettable?

It all began on 8 December 2025, when I learned that I had been selected as an anchor for the Annual Function, themed "Maa." At first, I thought it would be just another event. After all, I had anchored before.

Yet, deep inside, I felt a quiet excitement especially because it meant a short break from studies and a chance to relive the thrill I had felt two years ago. Rehearsals became the best part of our days: getting our lines, practicing with our partners, feeling nervous during the audition in front of Principal Ma'am, and enjoying one-hour break from regular classes filled with laughter and fun.

The real thrill began at the Pandit Deendayal Upadhyay Auditorium. Every teacher's encouraging smile made my nervousness fade. The annual function unfolded in two sessions, and each moment felt magical. The speech by our Chief Guest, Padma Shri Shri Bharti Bandhu and Dr. Swapnil Karmahe inspired us to dream big.

Before my turn, the school band's performance touched my heart so deeply that we had tears in our eyes the music carried love, emotion, and devotion in every beat. Finally my turn came and I, Pranav Sharma, along with my co-anchor Avani Dewangan, introduced the show with racing hearts and shining eyes.

The performances were unforgettable Brightonites expressing love for their mothers, a powerful tribute to Mother India, the fierce Kaali Tandav and Kantara dances, graceful classical performances, and my favourite segment, Brighton Champion, which showed pure passion for sports. The final moment, when the entire Brighton family came together on the stage along with Principal ma'am, Vice Principal ma'am and Head Mistress ma'am, filled the auditorium with pride and gratitude.

Behind the stage, there was laughter, silly games, secret smiles, and memories we will never forget. That day wasn't just a function it was joy, confidence and happiness wrapped into one. A day I wish I could live again and again.

MIND SPARK - A CELEBRATION OF TALENT, TEAMWORK AND LEARNING

Mindspark 2025–26, the annual inter-school event of Brighton International School, was held on 16th and 17th October, bringing together students from various schools to celebrate creativity, knowledge, and sportsmanship. Since its beginning in 2014–15, Mindspark has grown into one of the most awaited events of the year and continues to provide students with a platform to explore and express their talents.

The event opened with great enthusiasm in the presence of Shri Jagdish Barman, Regional Officer of CBSE, as the Chief Guest Dr. T. Rama Rao, Vice-Chancellor of Anjaneya University, as the Guest of Honour. The ceremony began with the traditional lighting of the lamp, followed by a beautiful welcome dance and an introduction to Mindspark by student representatives. Their words highlighted the purpose of the event to recognise young talent, encourage participation, and help students grow beyond classroom learning.

Over two exciting days, Mindspark hosted a wide range of competitions across four categories: Group A (Classes I–II), Group B (III–V), Group C (VI–VIII), and Group D (IX–XII). Students took part with immense enthusiasm in literary, cultural, artistic, technical, and sports events. The first day featured Poem Recitation, Quiz, Mono Act, and Poster Making. Musical talent shone through the Solo Song Competition, while Scratch Match added excitement for coders. Sportsmanship was high as the Cricket Tournament began, continuing into the next day. Day 1 also included thrilling Robotics events such as Dual Robo Soccer and Robo Hurdle.

The spirit of competition continued on 17 October with Story Narration, followed by the English Debate and Extempore. Artistic skills came alive through Face Painting, while creativity and innovation were highlighted in the Design.com. The technical zeal of Mindspark grew even stronger with events like Py Logic, Robo Dangal, and Robo Maze. The cultural charm of the event reached its peak with vibrant Dance Drama performances, and the day concluded with an energetic Volleyball Tournament. Each event, whether quiet and thoughtful or loud and action-filled, showcased the dedication and determination of every participant.

Every competition reflected the hard work, creativity, and confidence of students. The campus was filled with the excitement of over 800+ children from 29 esteemed schools across Raipur and beyond, who came together for two days to share ideas, encourage one another, and perform at their best. Mindspark once again proved that learning becomes meaningful when students explore, experiment, and express freely.

The Closing Ceremony was graced by Shri Dilip Sharangi, a renowned musician & known for his contribution to education and culture. His inspiring words motivated students to continue nurturing their abilities with dedication and discipline. The Brighton Anthem added pride and unity to the atmosphere as everyone awaited the results.

The most awaited moment was the Prize Distribution Ceremony, where winners in each category were rewarded for their outstanding performances. The announcement of the Overall Championship marked the proud finale of Mindspark 2025–26. The event ended with vote of thanks and a sense of achievement for all.

Mindspark 2025–26 was more than a competition it was an experience of teamwork, creativity, and growth. It reminded every participant that success is not only about winning but also about learning, trying, and believing in oneself. With lasting memories and renewed enthusiasm, Mindspark once again shone as a true celebration of young talent.

'THE RISE OF ECOVERSE'

Under WWF – The Model Conference of Parties 6, a Paper Bag Making Activity was conducted in the auditorium of our school, where we were taught how to make paper bags. During the activity, an idea sparked in my mind "Why can't I turn this into a business?" And thus, the journey of 'EcoVerse' began.

I experimented extensively to figure out how to make my bags stand out. After numerous trials, I discovered the key strength. I found that adding more layers made the bags sturdier, but only up to a limit of three to four layers. Beyond that, the bag became as hard as cardboard.

I learned to make small and medium-sized bags through YouTube, but my father suggested that people would require bigger and broader bags as well. So, I continued experimenting, and when I finally made my first large-sized bag, I felt like a mad scientist who had created something extraordinary!

The Partners in Progress Meet provided the perfect opportunity to showcase my products as a young entrepreneur. Anticipating a large crowd, I recruited two friends, Harshit Verma and Lavya Poptani, to help me make more bags. We worked together, and they quickly learned the process.

The big day arrived, and we set up our stall, nervous yet excited. As parents began to arrive, our hearts raced. We had our doubts and fears, but when the first parent approached, appreciated our work, and bought a medium-sized bag, we were over the moon. It was our first sale!

As more people purchased our products, we sold ten medium-sized bags. By the end of the day, we had earned a total of ₹351, which was a huge success considering our investment. We divided the earnings among ourselves, and EcoVerse was officially born.

Inspired by this experience, I took my entrepreneurial journey to the next level by setting up my own stall at an exhibition Euphoria held in Durg, where I sold bags worth ₹3500.

MY TIE-DYE ADVENTURE

Learning Tie-dye in Kindle was one of the most exciting and colourful experiences I have ever had at school. We went in the morning, and the entire day felt special from the start. Our teacher patiently explained the process and reminded us to listen carefully to the mentors who were helping us.

We began by creating different designs on dupattas and bags using rubber bands, grains, coins, and other small objects. Once the cloth was tightly tied, it was dipped into boiling water mixed with bright colours like red, blue, yellow, green, and more. We waited eagerly as the colours worked their magic. When we finally untied the cloth, beautiful and unique patterns appeared it felt truly magical! After rinsing the cloth in cold water, our creations looked even more vibrant. I absolutely loved this activity. It allowed us to be creative, have fun, and make something special that could even be gifted to our family members. I would love to try tie-dye again because it is a wonderful and joyful art form.

FROM HESITATION TO AWARENESS: SPREADING THE MESSAGE OF MENTAL HEALTH

A Journey through Our First Mental Awareness Booth

On 11 October 2025, our school set up its first psychology stall, where parents from all classes were invited to explore and experience something new. However, the process of inviting them turned out to be a completely different experience for us. We were assigned the task of locating parents and persuading them to visit our stall. To our surprise, many of them already had a basic understanding of mental health and were quite interested in learning more. There were also some parents who were hesitant to give an interview, as they didn't know much about the topic but that was the main purpose of the setup: to make people familiar with the concept of mental health.

At times, we felt a bit dejected and demotivated, but our teacher constantly reminded us that every moment was part of learning and gaining experience, especially in the field of interviewing and interacting with people. Keeping this in mind, we confidently approached more parents and eventually interviewed more than 30 people, inviting them to learn about mental health. By the end of the event, our team effort paid off, and our psychology stall turned out to be a great success.

Breaking the Silence : Conversations on Mental Health

My experience at the Psychology Mental Health Awareness Booth was truly one of the most rewarding experiences I've had. Engaging with so many people and hearing their perspectives on stress management, anxiety, mental health, and psychology was incredibly insightful. It helped me understand how psychological concepts apply in real-life situations, far beyond what we learn from textbooks.

I realised that the taboo surrounding mental health is still very widespread, which made our work at the booth feel even more meaningful. The experience also helped me understand my own stress-management habits better. Activities like "Myth vs. Fact," the "Mental Health Quiz," and the "Mental Health Checklist" drew a lot of interest and made learning about mental health both interactive and enjoyable.

Overall, it was a fulfilling and enriching experience. Working alongside other students, interacting with parents and peers about their routines and lifestyle choices, and exploring different approaches to coping with daily stress taught me a lot not just about psychology, but about people.

Mental Health Awareness Campaign

As a psychology student, participating in the Mental Health Awareness Campaign during the Breaking the Silence: Conversations on Mental Health at my school was one of the most meaningful experiences of the year. My friends and I took the initiative to design the campaign with the goal of helping students and parents understand the importance of mental well-being. We spent days preparing informative charts, creating posters, and planning short activities so that the session would feel interactive rather than formal.

During the event, we conducted quizzes, mini-games, and short discussions that encouraged people to think about mental health in a simple and engaging way. I personally enjoyed explaining concepts, clearing doubts, and listening to parents share their perspectives. Many students opened up about their stress and anxieties, and it felt fulfilling to reassure them using the knowledge I had gained in class. What touched me the most was the warm response we received. Parents appreciated our efforts, and several teachers praised our initiative. Seeing so many people participate enthusiastically made me feel proud of our hard work and teamwork. Overall, the campaign was a great success, and it strengthened my desire to continue promoting mental health awareness in the future.

SPREADING ENVIRONMENTAL AWARENESS AT MCOP-6

As part of the MCOP-6 (Model Conference of Parties) competition, we realised that transforming an entire city is not something one group can do alone. However, we can all contribute in small but meaningful ways. With this thought, we decided to involve the community by spreading awareness through a nukkad natak at Marine Drive, Raipur a place known for its lively weekend crowds.

We spent hours planning, scripting, and rehearsing to deliver a strong and relatable message. Our performance was divided into two segments: awareness about old cloth waste management and proper waste segregation using different bins. Our aim was not just to entertain, but to inspire responsibility. When the performance began, people gathered out of curiosity and stayed because the message connected with them. Through powerful dialogues and expressions, we reminded everyone that Earth is our only home and its protection begins with individual effort.

The response was truly encouraging. Many people appreciated the initiative and shared their thoughts on environmental care, reinforcing our belief that awareness leads to action. To reach a wider audience, we also shared the performance on social media, where it received appreciation and sparked meaningful conversations.

Through this initiative, we achieved our goal to start a conversation, raise awareness, and remind everyone that protecting our environment is a shared responsibility.

Participating in WWF's MCoP-6 competition was one of the most inspiring experiences of my life. As a delegate, I had the responsibility of representing my team's ideas while motivating the community to take small but meaningful steps toward sustainable development. This role helped me grow as a communicator, leader, and changemaker.

Our project encouraged simple habits such as reducing waste, saving water, choosing eco-friendly alternatives, and understanding biodiversity. Through interactive sessions and creative outreach, I witnessed genuine interest and positive change among people of different age groups. Small actions like using reusable bags, reducing plastic, or starting clean-up drives showed how awareness can create a ripple effect.

Working with my team taught me the value of responsibility and teamwork. MCoP-6 was not just a competition but a journey of learning and contribution, strengthening my belief that every individual can make a difference and inspiring me to continue advocating for the planet.

A JOURNEY OF AWARENESS AND RESPONSIBILITY

Being a part of the WWF awareness programme was a truly uplifting experience for me. From the very beginning, while watching the inspiring videos, I felt a strong realisation awaken within me that our planet needs us and that even small, sincere efforts can create a meaningful impact.

Throughout this journey, I experienced a blend of excitement, responsibility, and inspiration. It no longer felt like just an activity or competition; it became a purpose. With each passing day, I grew more aware, thoughtful, and connected to nature. There were moments of genuine pride knowing that I was contributing to something meaningful and larger than myself.

What touched me most was the sense of hope this experience gave me. It showed me that change begins with a single decision or effort, and when others join in, that effort grows into a powerful movement. This strengthened my belief that our generation truly has the ability to protect and restore the environment.

As the leader of our team, I was responsible for guiding and coordinating activities while ensuring that everyone's ideas were valued. Our initiatives included motivating children to make paper bags, performing a nukkad natak, visiting different schools, practising to make vermi compost and creating eco-friendly leaf plates. I worked closely with my team to organise each step and keep us focused on our goal. Leading this journey taught me the importance of teamwork, patience, and perseverance, and it inspired me to continue contributing positively towards the environment.

BREWING CONFIDENCE: MY ENTREPRENEURIAL EXPERIENCE

Participating as an entrepreneur in Partners in Progress Meet was an unforgettable and joyful experience for me. I set up a Dalgona coffee stall, a drink made by whipping instant coffee, sugar, and water into a creamy foam over milk, which I learned during the KINDLE: Skill Development Programme at Brighton.

The event was filled with energy and excitement as students and parents visited my stall, showed curiosity, and enjoyed the coffee. Their warm compliments made me feel proud and happy. Earning money through my own efforts gave me the confidence of being a young entrepreneur. Managing money, interacting with customers, and managing the stall helped me become more responsible and independent.

Overall, the experience was a wonderful learning journey that taught me real-world skills and boosted my self-belief. I would love to participate in such events again as they help students grow, learn, and discover their potential.

MY EXPERIENCE AT THE 'VOCAL FOR LOCAL'

As a student reporter, I had the opportunity to cover the 'Vocal for Local' event held during Partners in Progress Meet, and the experience was truly inspiring. The event brought together students, teachers, and many visiting parents, all eager to explore and appreciate the efforts of young creators.

The school ground turned vibrant with a variety of stalls. The crochet and handmade jewellery stall displayed beautifully crafted earrings, key chains, and accessories. The handmade chocolates stall offered delicious treats made from simple local ingredients. There were also stalls showcasing artwork, customised gifts, eco-friendly items, and homemade snacks each representing hours of dedication and creativity. Walking through these stalls, interacting with the stall owners, and observing the enthusiasm of sellers, buyers, and parents gave me a deeper understanding of the importance of supporting local talent.

Reporting on this event taught me how small initiatives can contribute to larger movements like 'Vocal for Local.' The event was not just a marketplace it was a celebration of talent, sustainability, and community spirit.

The Partners in Progress Meet at our school became even more special with the "Vocal for Local" initiative. As a student reporter, I interacted with parents to know their experience at the stalls run by young entrepreneurs. Initially, students felt disappointed due to low sales, but as parents arrived, the atmosphere transformed, and their joy on receiving appreciation was truly overwhelming.

When I asked a parent how did they feel seeing students promote "Vocal for Local," they shared that they felt extremely proud and were mesmerized by the talent and dedication shown at such a young age. Parents greatly appreciated the confidence with which students promoted local products. The stalls displayed remarkable creativity, featuring handmade crochet items, chocolates, jewellery, diyas, jute bags, wall hangings, and hampers. Each stall reflected hard work, imagination, and a strong entrepreneurial spirit, making the event a great success.

During Diwali, our teacher encouraged us to promote Indian local products and create awareness about their importance. While I was initially unsure about what to sell, I decided to focus on spreading the message of Vocal for Local instead.

At the Partners in Progress Meet, I explained parents and teachers how supporting Indian products strengthen small businesses, preserves traditional skills, and helps our economy grow. I also shared how choosing local products is a sustainable, affordable, and patriotic choice. The positive response from parents showed that my message had made an impact.

Before the event, I interacted with local vendors in my area and saw how even a small increase in sales brought them happiness. Presenting my ideas was exciting yet challenging, as some parents asked difficult questions. However, answering them calmly helped boost my confidence and communication skills.

This experience taught me that even small efforts by students can create meaningful change in the community and contribute positively to the nation.

YOUTH PARLIAMENT

Youth Parliament was one of the most memorable and enriching experiences of my school life, filled with excitement, nervousness, laughter, and learning. From the very first practice, the energetic atmosphere helped us confidently understand parliamentary functioning, teamwork, and presence of mind.

During the session, Apurv stood out as a powerful speaker with impressive command over words and calm confidence. Though he fumbled briefly during the final session, his strong preparation ensured an outstanding performance. Our practices were also filled with fun dramatic announcements like “Speaker Madam padhar rahi hain” and Aadhya’s shayari often left everyone laughing, with Gunmala ma’am enjoying and encouraging the cheerful spirit.

Along with the fun, there were intense moments where debates felt real, with heated exchanges and spontaneous reactions showing everyone’s deep involvement. The unscripted Zero Hour became the highlight, allowing genuine, emotional expression that made it truly unforgettable.

Both sides delivered powerful performances the ruling party with clarity and composure, and the opposition with energy and wit. Special appreciation goes to Aditi Pritwani, who captured every moment behind the camera. The event ended on a heartwarming note when members from both sides apologised to one another, symbolising respect, unity, and true leadership.

Paridhi Dhanodia,

Youth Parliament was not just an experience for me; it was an emotion. Each one of us poured our heart and soul into making it a success, which reflected clearly in every session. From the rigorous stay-back practices conducted by Gunmala ma’am where we were pushed beyond our comfort zones and encouraged to be fiercer in our questioning to practising with the camera on, every moment prepared us thoroughly. By the final day, all camera phobia had vanished.

Parents were welcomed warmly, and we dressed like real delegates. The girls looked elegant in sarees representing our culture, while the boys wore traditional kurtas. The Question Hour witnessed intense and informative discussions, with the government being held accountable through strong arguments. Both sides attacked fearlessly, and such was the passion that we often spoke even before being prompted, our voices driven by sheer conviction.

The Zero Hour remains the most unforgettable part of the Youth Parliament. In that moment, we forgot we were school students and truly felt like members of the Parliament of India. The Speaker managed the house effectively, while the ruling party responded calmly and the opposition questioned with such energy and aggression that it pushed the government to its limits.
